

Acts 16:28

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

But Paul cried with a loud voice, saying, Do thyself no harm:
for we are all here.

Analysis

'Paul cried with a loud voice, saying, Do thyself no harm: for we are all here.' Paul's intervention saved the jailor's physical life before saving his soul. Despite unjust treatment, Paul showed compassion to his captor. This selfless concern demonstrated Christian love and prepared the jailor's heart for the gospel. Genuine faith produces love for enemies.

Historical Context

Paul could have escaped but chose to remain, valuing the jailor's life and salvation over personal freedom. This extraordinary compassion after severe beating demonstrates supernatural grace.
