

Acts 16:39

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And they came and besought them, and brought them out, and desired them to depart out of the city.

Analysis

'They came and besought them, and brought them out, and desired them to depart out of the city.' The magistrates' personal apology shows how completely the situation reversed. Yet they still wanted Paul to leave - his presence was politically uncomfortable. Paul's vindication was complete, but the gospel's advance required moving on.

Historical Context

The magistrates' request for departure, though now polite, achieved their original goal - removing Paul from Philippi. However, a thriving church remained (Phil. 1:1), showing that gospel work transcends individual ministers.

Study Questions

1. How should we respond to forced apologies that still seek our removal?
2. What does it mean to accept vindication without demanding revenge?
3. How can we trust God's purposes when we must leave fields of ministry?
