

Acts 16:8

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And they passing by Mysia came down to Troas.

Analysis

And they passing by Mysia came down to Troas (παρελθόντες δὲ τὴν Μυσίαν κατέβησαν εἰς Τρωάδα)—The verb παρελθόντες (parelthontes, 'passing by') suggests they traveled through Mysia but did not evangelize there, obeying the Spirit's prohibition (v.7). This geographical progression—from Phrygia through Mysia to Troas—traces divine sovereignty overriding human plans.

Troas was a Roman colony on the Aegean coast, the seaport from which Paul would cross into Macedonia after receiving the Macedonian vision (v.9). This seemingly mundane travel note marks a watershed moment: the gospel's transition from Asia to Europe. God's 'no' to Bithynia and Asia was preparation for His 'yes' to Macedonia—illustrating how divine guidance often redirects rather than merely restricts.

Historical Context

Troas (Alexandria Troas) was founded by Antigonus I in 310 BC, later becoming a Roman colony under Augustus. It served as a major port connecting Asia Minor to Macedonia. This was Paul's second missionary journey (c. AD 49-52), and Luke may have joined the team here (note the 'we' passages beginning in v.10).

Study Questions

1. When has God's closed door in your life actually been redirection toward a better purpose?
2. How does Paul's willingness to change plans demonstrate the difference between flexibility and faithlessness?
