

Acts 17:15

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And they that conducted Paul brought him unto Athens: and receiving a commandment unto Silas and Timotheus for to come to him with all speed, they departed.

Analysis

And they that conducted Paul brought him unto Athens—Paul's escorts from Berea delivered him to Athens, the intellectual capital of the ancient world, city of Plato, Aristotle, and Socrates. The verb kathistēmi (καθίστημι, "to bring down, conduct") suggests careful guidance to safety after the violent opposition in Berea (v. 13).

Receiving a commandment unto Silas and Timotheus for to come to him with all speed (έντολὴν λαβόντες, entolēn labontes, "having received orders")—Paul's isolation was temporary by design. Though the apostle stood alone before the Areopagus philosophers, he urgently summoned his ministry team. Even Paul, the great apostle, recognized the necessity of Christian fellowship and collaborative ministry. The phrase "with all speed" (hōs tachistos, ώς τάχιστος) reveals Paul's pastoral heart—alone in hostile territory, he longed for his brothers.

Historical Context

Athens in the 1st century AD had declined from its classical glory but remained the philosophical hub of the Roman Empire. Paul likely arrived around AD 51 during his second missionary journey. The city boasted numerous temples and philosophical schools, making it simultaneously one of the most educated and most idolatrous cities Paul encountered.

1. How does Paul's urgent summons for Silas and Timothy challenge modern notions of "lone ranger" Christianity?
2. What can we learn from Paul entering Athens alone before his team arrives about courage in evangelistic opportunities?
