

Acts 17:16

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Now while Paul waited for them at Athens, his spirit was stirred in him, when he saw the city wholly given to idolatry.

Analysis

His spirit was stirred in him (παρωξύνετο τὸ πνεῦμα αὐτοῦ, parōxyneto to pneuma autou)—Paul experienced deep provocation, the same Greek root giving us 'paroxysm.' This wasn't mere annoyance but righteous grief over spiritual adultery. Athens, the intellectual crown of classical civilization, was a theological catastrophe.

Wholly given to idolatry (κατείδωλον, kateidōlon)—literally 'under idols' or 'full of idols.' Petronius said it was easier to find a god in Athens than a man. The city that produced Socrates, Plato, and Aristotle had descended into religious syncretism. Paul's response models how gospel proclamation begins with grief over human rebellion, not intellectual admiration of pagan philosophy.

Historical Context

Athens in AD 50-51 had long passed its political zenith but remained the philosophical capital of the Roman world. The Acropolis featured the Parthenon (dedicated to Athena), while the Agora contained altars to the Twelve Olympians, plus countless statues to gods, heroes, and deified abstractions. Pausanias later counted over 30,000 public statues. Paul encountered Epicurean and Stoic philosophers (v.18) in this context.

Study Questions

1. What modern 'idols' (wealth, status, ideology) should stir your spirit with the same grief Paul felt in Athens?
2. How does Paul's emotional response to idolatry inform Christian engagement with intellectually sophisticated but spiritually bankrupt cultures?
