

Acts 17:30

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And the times of this ignorance God winked at; but now commandeth all men every where to repent:

Analysis

The times of this ignorance God winked at (τοὺς μὲν οὖν χρόνους τῆς ἀγνοίας ὑπεριδὼν ὁ θεός)—The verb winked at (ὑπεριδὼν, hyperidōn) means 'overlooked' or 'passed over,' not that God approved pagan idolatry but that He withheld immediate judgment during the pre-Christ era (Romans 3:25-26). Ignorance (ἀγνοία) acknowledges humanity's culpable unknowing—not innocent ignorance but willful suppression of truth (Romans 1:18-23).

But now (τὰ νῦν) marks the decisive shift brought by Christ's coming. God commandeth all men every where to repent (παραγγέλλει τοῖς ἀνθρώποις πάντας πανταχοῦ μετανοεῖν)—universal scope ('all,' 'everywhere') and imperative mood ('commandeth'). Repent (μετανοεῖν, metanoein) means 'change one's mind,' involving intellectual acknowledgment of sin, emotional sorrow, and volitional turning to God. This isn't suggestion but divine command with eternal consequences.

Historical Context

Spoken to Athenian philosophers on Mars Hill (Areopagus) circa AD 50. Athens worshiped countless gods and prided itself on philosophical sophistication. Paul's declaration that their 'ignorance' required repentance offended Greek intellectual pride—they sought wisdom, but Paul proclaimed moral accountability before the Creator God they didn't acknowledge.

Study Questions

1. How does understanding repentance as God's command (not mere option) affect your urgency in calling others to Christ?
2. In what areas of your life might you be relying on 'ignorance' as an excuse rather than genuinely repenting?
