

Acts 2:20

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before that great and notable day of the Lord come:

Analysis

The Day of the Lord - 'great and notable' (Greek 'epiphane', shining forth) - represents both terror for the impenitent and triumph for believers. This day encompasses judgment and salvation simultaneously, as seen in Christ's first advent which brought both condemnation for rejecting Jews and salvation for believing remnant. The sun turning to darkness and moon to blood symbolize the overturning of creation's order under divine judgment.

Historical Context

Prophets consistently portrayed the Day of the Lord as judgment on Israel's enemies and purification of God's people (Isaiah 2:12, Zephaniah 1:14, Malachi 4:5). Peter connects Pentecost to this day's inauguration, suggesting the church age is the period of Spirit-empowered witness before final judgment.
