

Acts 2:23

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain:

Analysis

This verse presents the paradox of divine sovereignty and human responsibility. Jesus was 'delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God' - His crucifixion was ordained before creation (Revelation 13:8). Yet perpetrators acted 'by wicked hands' and are culpable. This mystery safeguards both God's absolute control over history and human moral accountability. The Greek 'horismene boule' (determinate counsel) indicates settled divine decree, not mere permission.

Historical Context

Peter addressed the same Jerusalem crowd complicit in Christ's execution 50 days prior. His bold accusation 'ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified' directly charged his hearers with deicide, yet offered hope through repentance (v. 38). This demonstrates law and gospel's proper distinction.
