

Acts 2:4

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.

Analysis

Filled with the Holy Ghost (ἐπλήσθησαν πνεύματος ἁγίου)—The aorist passive verb indicates God's sovereign action, not human achievement. This fulfills John the Baptist's prophecy (Luke 3:16) and Jesus' promise (Acts 1:5). Began to speak with other tongues (γλώσσαις λαλεῖν)—the Spirit's first manifestation was multilingual witness, enabling gospel proclamation to Jews from 'every nation under heaven' (v.5). The 'tongues' were recognizable languages (dialects, v.6), not ecstatic speech—a reversal of Babel's confusion (Genesis 11). This supernatural gift demonstrated the gospel's universal scope.

Historical Context

The 'other tongues' enabled Galilean disciples to be understood by Diaspora Jews speaking Parthian, Median, Elamite, etc. (vv.9-11). This equipped the church for global mission from its inception. Around 3,000 converts from various nations would carry the gospel back to their homelands.

Study Questions

1. How does Pentecost's tongue-speaking as clear communication differ from unintelligible ecstatic speech?
2. In what ways does the Spirit still equip believers to cross cultural and linguistic barriers?
