

Acts 26:6

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers:

Analysis

---

And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers—Paul identifies the core issue: his trial concerns elpis (έλπις, hope) in God's epangelia (έπαγγελία, promise) to the patriarchs. This is not about novel doctrine but Israel's ancient hope—the Messianic promise woven through Genesis 3:15, the Abrahamic covenant (Gen 12:3), and prophetic Scripture.

Paul's defense strategy is brilliant: he reframes his "crime" as faithfulness to Judaism's foundational hope. The irony is profound—Paul stands accused by Jewish leaders for believing what every pious Jew claimed to await: the resurrection and the Messiah. His imprisonment vindicates his claim that Christianity is the fulfillment, not the abandonment, of Israel's faith. As he will argue in verses 22-23, he preaches "nothing but what the prophets and Moses said would come to pass."

Historical Context

Paul speaks before King Agrippa II (AD 60-62), who as a Herodian king was educated in Jewish law and prophecy. This is Paul's third defense speech in Acts (cf. 22:1-21, 24:10-21). The "promise to our fathers" references the patriarchal covenants—God's oath to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob—which first-century Judaism unanimously affirmed, even while disagreeing on the details of fulfillment.

Study Questions

1. How does Paul's appeal to "the hope of the promise" challenge the dichotomy between Old and New Testament faith?
2. In what ways does your Christian hope connect to God's ancient promises to Israel, and why does this continuity matter?
