

Acts 27:17

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Which when they had taken up, they used helps, undergirding the ship; and, fearing lest they should fall into the quicksands, strake sail, and so were driven.

Analysis

They used helps, undergirding the ship—The 'helps' (βοηθείαις, boētheiais) were cables passed under the hull to prevent timbers from separating under wave stress, called 'frapping.' Fearing lest they should fall into the quicksands—the Syrtis (Σύρτις, Syrtin), two shallow sandbars off Libya's coast where ships grounded and broke apart. Their terror was justified; many vessels perished there. Strake sail (χαλάσαντες τὸ σκεῦος, chalasantes to skeuos, 'lowering the gear')—they reduced sail or dragged sea anchors to slow the southwestward drift. Frantic human effort—undergirding, lowering sail—achieved nothing without God's promise (27:24). Yet God honors faithful stewardship even when success depends on grace.

Historical Context

The Syrtis Major and Syrtis Minor (modern Gulf of Sidra and Gulf of Gabes off Libya/Tunisia) were graveyard shallows feared throughout antiquity. Ships driven into them grounded on shifting sands and were pounded apart by waves. Ancient vessels' wooden hulls, joined by mortise-and-tenon, needed reinforcement during extreme stress. The crew's seamanship, though ultimately insufficient, showed professional competence.
