

Acts 28:30

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, and received all that came in unto him,

Analysis

And Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house—The summary of Paul's Roman imprisonment: διετίαν ὅλην (dietian holēn, 'two whole years')—approximately AD 60-62. His own hired house (ἰδίῳ μισθώματι, idiō misthōmati, 'his own rented dwelling') indicates Paul paid for lodging, likely through support from churches (Philippians 4:14-18) or his tentmaking. Though under guard (28:16), he had relative freedom—not a dungeon but house arrest.

And received all that came in unto him—The phrase ἀπεδέχετο πάντας τοὺς εἰσπορευομένους πρὸς αὐτόν (apedecheto pantas tous eisporeuomenous pros auton, 'he was welcoming all who came to him') shows unlimited access. Paul's 'prison' became a ministry hub—visitors, churches, inquirers, skeptics all came. During these two years, Paul wrote Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, and Philemon (the 'Prison Epistles'), which would shape Christian theology for millennia. Chains didn't stop the gospel; they amplified it (Philippians 1:12-14).

Historical Context

Roman house arrest (custodia libera) was for citizens awaiting trial who weren't flight risks. Paul was chained to a rotating guard (28:20, Ephesians 6:20), but could receive visitors, correspond, and minister. The two-year period likely ended with Paul's release (tradition holds he made a fourth missionary journey to Spain before his final arrest and martyrdom c. AD 67-68). Acts' abrupt ending—no verdict, no martyrdom account—suggests Luke wrote before trial concluded. The open ending is fitting: Paul's ministry continues, the gospel spreads, the story isn't finished—it's still being written through the church.
