

Acts 4:22

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

For the man was above forty years old, on whom this miracle of healing was shewed.

Analysis

---

The note that 'the man was above forty years old, on whom this miracle of healing was shewed' emphasizes the healing's magnitude. Forty years of lameness made the cure medically impossible, requiring supernatural explanation. The Greek 'sēmeion' (miracle, sign) indicates this healing pointed beyond itself to greater reality - Christ's power over all infirmity, physical and spiritual. The passive voice 'was shewed' attributes healing to divine agency, not human ability.

Historical Context

Ancient medical knowledge recognized that congenital or long-term lameness was incurable - atrophied muscles and deformed bones couldn't heal naturally. Forty years exceeded most ancient lifespans' half, making this man's condition and cure well-documented. His age and condition made skeptical dismissal impossible.

Study Questions

1. How do 'impossible' cases magnify God's glory and authenticate gospel truth?

2. What does physical healing point to regarding Christ's power over spiritual infirmity?
