

Acts 5:19

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

But the angel of the Lord by night opened the prison doors,
and brought them forth, and said,

Analysis

---

The miraculous deliverance - 'the angel of the Lord by night opened the prison doors, and brought them forth' - demonstrates God's sovereign control. The Greek 'angelos kyriou' (angel of the Lord) may indicate Christ's pre-incarnate appearances or angelic messenger. The timing 'by night' avoided detection while the opened doors (Greek 'anoixas') showed supernatural power. The command 'Go, stand and speak in the temple to the people all the words of this life' turned deliverance toward mission - freedom served proclamation, not escape.

Historical Context

Angelic prison rescue parallels Peter's later deliverance (Acts 12:6-10) and Paul's (Acts 16:26). These interventions demonstrated God's control over imprisonment. The angel's command to return to temple teaching showed boldness - immediate return to the site of arrest. 'Words of this life' (Greek 'rhēmata tēs zōēs tautēs') emphasized gospel's life-giving power.

Study Questions

1. How does miraculous deliverance serve gospel proclamation rather than personal comfort?
2. What does the command to return immediately to temple teaching reveal about kingdom priorities?
