

Acts 5:38

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And now I say unto you, Refrain from these men, and let them alone: for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to nought:

Analysis

Gamaliel's famous counsel—'Refrain from these men, and let them alone'—expresses confidence that false movements self-destruct. His conditional reasoning ('if this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to nought') proves prophetically true for the church's survival. Though Gamaliel likely remained unconvinced, his prudential advice allowed Christianity to grow under divine protection, demonstrating God's sovereignty over even unbelieving authorities.

Historical Context

The Sanhedrin's receptiveness to Gamaliel's counsel reflects his immense authority. Roman oversight limited the Sanhedrin's ability to execute perceived threats without cause, making prudence politically wise. Gamaliel's moderation contrasts with Sadducean extremism and prefigures his student Paul's eventual conversion.

Study Questions

1. How does 2,000 years of church history vindicate Gamaliel's test for discerning God's work versus human movements?
2. What does God's use of an unconverted Pharisee to protect the early church teach us about divine providence?
