

Acts 7:24

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And seeing one of them suffer wrong, he defended him, and avenged him that was oppressed, and smote the Egyptian:

Analysis

Moses' defense of his Hebrew brother demonstrates early signs of his calling as deliverer, yet his fleshly zeal preceded God's timing. The Reformed understanding emphasizes that even our righteous acts apart from divine commission can miss God's purposes. Moses would spend forty years in the wilderness before God's proper call came (Acts 7:30), illustrating that human initiative, even with good intentions, must yield to divine sovereignty and timing.

Historical Context

This event from Exodus 2:11-12 occurred when Moses was forty years old (Acts 7:23), during Egypt's New Kingdom period. Moses had been raised with full Egyptian education and privilege, creating internal tension between his Hebrew identity and Egyptian upbringing.

Study Questions

1. How does Moses' premature action warn against acting on God's behalf without His clear calling?
2. What does forty years of waiting teach us about God's patient preparation of His servants?
3. In what areas might you be running ahead of God's timing despite good intentions?
