

Acts 9:28

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And he was with them coming in and going out at Jerusalem.

Analysis

And he was with them coming in and going out at Jerusalem. Saul's acceptance into Jerusalem church fellowship demonstrates restored relationships through credible testimony and the comprehensive nature of Christian community.

With them indicates full incorporation—not probationary membership but complete acceptance as brother. The phrase coming in and going out is Hebrew idiom for complete life participation (Deuteronomy 28:6, Psalm 121:8). Saul wasn't merely tolerated but embraced, participating fully in community's daily life.

This marks remarkable transformation from Acts 9:26—from feared outsider to welcomed insider through Barnabas's advocacy (Acts 9:27). Reformed theology emphasizes church as covenant community where members bear responsibility for one another. Barnabas's intervention exemplifies this duty—established believers helping incorporate new converts.

The fellowship's restoration foreshadows Saul's ministry theme: reconciliation through Christ breaks down dividing walls (Ephesians 2:14-16). Saul experienced this personally—former enemy welcomed as family. This gospel pattern repeats: hostile parties reconciled through Christ's cross, demonstrated in church fellowship transcending natural divisions.

Historical Context

Saul's Jerusalem visit lasted fifteen days (Galatians 1:18-19), spent with Peter and meeting James, Jesus' brother. The phrase coming in and going out suggests public ministry alongside private fellowship. Acts 9:29 specifies he debated Hellenistic Jews—same group that killed Stephen (Acts 6:9-14).

Saul's bold witness among Stephen's killers fulfilled providential pattern—replacing fallen witness. However, this provoked murderous opposition (Acts 9:29), forcing hasty departure to Tarsus (Acts 9:30). The brief Jerusalem stay around 37 CE established Paul's legitimacy with apostolic leadership while demonstrating that even Jerusalem wasn't safe for this controversial convert. God was directing Saul toward his true calling—Gentile apostleship beyond Palestine.
