

Colossians 1:15

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Who is the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of every creature:

Analysis

Who is the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of every creature. This verse begins the magnificent Christ hymn (1:15-20), possibly an early Christian hymn Paul quotes. "Image" (eikōn, εἰκών) means exact representation, not mere resemblance. Christ perfectly reveals God's nature; seeing Jesus is seeing God (John 14:9). This counters any teaching suggesting mediating beings between God and humanity—Christ alone fully manifests deity.

"The firstborn of every creature" (prōtotokos pasēs ktiseōs, πρωτότοκος πάσης κτίσεως) has sparked controversy. "Firstborn" doesn't mean first created but holds the rights of primogeniture—supremacy, authority, preeminence. Psalm 89:27 uses "firstborn" for David's royal supremacy. Christ isn't part of creation but sovereign over it, possessing inheritance rights over all that exists. Verse 16 clarifies: He created all things, therefore cannot be created.

Historical Context

Greek philosophy sought to protect God's transcendence by proposing intermediate beings (demiurge, emanations, aeons) that created and mediated between pure spirit and corrupt matter. The Colossian heresy apparently incorporated similar ideas, diminishing Christ by making Him one mediator among many. Paul's hymn demolishes such thinking: Christ is God's perfect image and creation's supreme Lord, requiring no supplementary mediators.
