

Colossians 1:27

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory:

Analysis

To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory. Paul reveals the mystery's content: "Christ in you" (Christos en hymin, Χριστὸς ἐν ὑμῖν). The "you" is plural, addressing Gentiles corporately. The mystery isn't merely that Gentiles can be saved but that they're fully incorporated into Christ, indwelt by Him equally with Jewish believers, without becoming Jewish. This demolished ethnic privileging in God's people.

"The riches of the glory of this mystery" piles up superlatives. Ploutos (πλοῦτος, "riches"), doxa (δόξα, "glory"), and mystērion (μυστήριον, "mystery") emphasize the revelation's incomprehensible value. God chose to disclose infinite treasure—Christ Himself—to Gentiles previously excluded from covenant promises. This generous inclusion displays divine grace's magnitude.

"The hope of glory" (hē elpis tēs doxēs, ἡ ἐλπίς τῆς δόξης) identifies Christ as both present reality (in you now) and future hope (glory to come). Believers possess Christ currently through the Spirit's indwelling, guaranteeing future glorification. This present-future tension characterizes Christian existence: already possessing Christ, not yet experiencing complete transformation. Christ within is glory's guarantee.

Historical Context

Jewish expectation anticipated Messiah blessing Israel while Gentiles served subordinately or were judged. The scandal of Paul's gospel was equal standing: Gentiles receive identical spiritual status without circumcision or law-keeping, united to Jews in one body through faith alone. This wasn't merely tolerating Gentiles but celebrating their full inclusion as God's deliberate purpose, not afterthought.
