

Colossians 3:14

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And above all these things put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness.

Analysis

And above all these things put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness.

Paul climaxes the virtue list with agapēn (ἀγάπην, "charity/love"), the supreme Christian virtue. "Above all these things" (epi pasin de toutoīs, ἐπὶ πᾶσιν δὲ τούτοις) means either "in addition to" or "over" these virtues—love crowns them all, the outer garment completing the outfit. "Put on" continues clothing metaphor.

Love is "the bond of perfectness" (syndesmos tēs teleiotētos, σύνδεσμος τῆς τελειότητος), literally "the binding element of maturity/completeness." Love unifies all virtues, holding them together and bringing believers to maturity. Without love, other virtues become distorted: compassion without love is condescension; humility without love is false modesty; patience without love is passive aggression. Love perfects and integrates all Christian character.

Historical Context

Greek distinguished multiple love words: eros (romantic/sexual), philia (friendship), storge (familial), agape (self-giving commitment). Christianity elevated agape—the love God shows in Christ, choosing others' good despite cost. This love type was relatively rare in pagan literature but became Christianity's defining characteristic (John 13:35). Early Christians were noted for caring for sick, poor, and marginalized—practical agape that testified to gospel truth.
