

Colossians 3:23

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men;

Analysis

And whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men. Paul universalizes the principle. "Whatsoever ye do" (ho ean poiēte, ὃ ἐὰν ποιῆτε) encompasses all work without exception. "Do it heartily" (ek psychēs ergazesthe, ἐκ ψυχῆς ἐργάζεσθε) literally means "work from the soul"—wholeheartedly, with full energy and commitment, not grudgingly or halfheartedly.

"As to the Lord, and not unto men" (hōs tō Kyriō kai ouk anthrōpois, ὡς τῷ Κυρίῳ καὶ οὐκ ἀνθρώποις) reframes work's ultimate audience. Human employers are immediate authorities, but Christ is ultimate Master. This transforms even menial or unpleasant tasks into sacred service. Poor or cruel bosses can't diminish work's significance when offered to Christ. This doctrine revolutionizes work ethic, providing motivation transcending circumstances or recognition.

Historical Context

Ancient world divided humanity into those who worked (slaves, manual laborers—despised) and leisured elite (philosophers, politicians—honored). Christianity dignified all honest work as service to Christ, regardless of social status or task's nature. This attracted working-class converts and transformed Christian communities into economically diverse bodies where manual laborers worshiped alongside wealthy members as equals before Christ.

Study Questions

1. How would your work quality, attitude, and diligence change if you truly worked for Christ, not humans?
2. What work tasks do you do grudgingly or halfheartedly that you should do 'heartily as to the Lord'?
3. How can you maintain excellent work ethic despite difficult circumstances, unreasonable demands, or lack of appreciation?
