

Daniel 2:20

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Daniel answered and said, Blessed be the name of God for ever and ever: for wisdom and might are his:

Analysis

Daniel's doxology 'Blessed be the name of God for ever and ever' begins his worship response to answered prayer. The phrase 'for ever and ever' (Hebrew: min olam v'ad olam, from eternity to eternity) proclaims God's eternal nature. Attributing 'wisdom and might' to God emphasizes His comprehensive sovereignty—He knows all things (wisdom) and controls all things (might). This combination means God both understands and accomplishes His purposes without limitation. Daniel's worship focuses entirely on God's character rather than the personal benefit of receiving revelation.

Historical Context

Jewish doxological prayers typically blessed God's name, acknowledging His attributes and deeds. This form appears throughout Scripture (cf. Psalm 41:13; 106:48; 1 Chronicles 29:10-13). The dual attribution of wisdom and might reflects ancient Near Eastern royal ideology—kings claimed wisdom to govern and might to conquer. Daniel ascribes these supremely to God, implicitly subordinating all earthly kings including Nebuchadnezzar.
