

Daniel 2:37

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Thou, O king, art a king of kings: for the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power, and strength, and glory.

Analysis

Daniel addresses Nebuchadnezzar as 'king of kings'—a title claiming supreme authority but ironically subordinate to the true King of kings (Revelation 19:16). Daniel immediately clarifies: 'the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power, and strength, and glory.' The fourfold attribution (kingdom, power, strength, glory) emphasizes comprehensiveness while asserting divine origin. Nebuchadnezzar rules only by God's sovereign grant, not inherent right. This theological truth simultaneously honors the king's present authority while relativizing it under divine sovereignty. Daniel models speaking truth to power—respectful but uncompromising about ultimate allegiance.

Historical Context

Persian emperors later officially used 'king of kings' (shahanshah), and the title appears in ancient Mesopotamian royal inscriptions indicating supremacy over vassal kings. Nebuchadnezzar ruled the largest empire of his era, having conquered Egypt, Judah, and surrounding nations. Yet Daniel declares this vast power was granted by Israel's God, not Marduk or military prowess. This bold theological claim confronted Babylonian ideology attributing the king's success to Babylonian deities.
