

Daniel 6:25

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Then king Darius wrote unto all people, nations, and languages, that dwell in all the earth; Peace be multiplied unto you.

Analysis

Darius issues a decree acknowledging God's supremacy: 'I make a decree, That in every dominion of my kingdom men tremble and fear before the God of Daniel: for he is the living God, and stedfast for ever, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed, and his dominion shall be even unto the end.' The universal scope ('every dominion') shows empire-wide proclamation. The attributes—'living God,' 'stedfast for ever,' 'kingdom that shall not be destroyed,' 'dominion...unto the end'—comprise sophisticated theology remarkably similar to biblical monotheism. This decree provides testimony to God's character throughout the Persian Empire.

Historical Context

Persian royal decrees were disseminated throughout the vast empire in multiple languages (cf. Esther 8:9). This decree would have reached from India to Ethiopia, providing witness to Yahweh's power among Gentile nations. The theology rivals biblical proclamations—God's eternal kingdom, unchanging nature, and universal dominion. Whether Darius experienced genuine conversion or merely acknowledged Yahweh's power while maintaining polytheism remains unclear, but the decree's content advances God's purposes regardless of the king's personal faith state.

Study Questions

1. How does God use dramatic deliverances to create testimony that reaches far beyond the immediate situation?
2. What does Darius's decree teach about how God can use even pagan rulers to proclaim His character and advance His purposes?
