

Daniel 6:7

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

All the presidents of the kingdom, the governors, and the princes, the counsellors, and the captains, have consulted together to establish a royal statute, and to make a firm decree, that whosoever shall ask a petition of any God or man for thirty days, save of thee, O king, he shall be cast into the den of lions.

Analysis

The conspirators manipulate the king through flattery and deception: 'All the presidents of the kingdom, the governors, and the princes, the counsellors, and the captains, have consulted together to establish a royal statute.' The claim 'all' is false—Daniel, the chief president, wasn't consulted. The proposal that no one petition any god or man except the king for thirty days exploits royal vanity while appearing to secure loyalty. The Medo-Persian law's irrevocability (v. 8, 12, 15) means once signed, even the king cannot change it. The trap is set—they've created legal requirement Daniel cannot obey without violating God's law.

Historical Context

Persian legal tradition emphasized law's permanence and binding nature on even kings (cf. Esther 1:19; 8:8). This differed from Babylonian practice where kings had more arbitrary power. The irrevocability of Medo-Persian law becomes crucial to the plot—once the king signs, he cannot save Daniel. The thirty-day prohibition likely appealed to Darius's desire to consolidate loyalty after conquest. Ancient Near Eastern rulers sometimes claimed divine status or exclusive mediation with deities. The prohibition's limited duration made it seem temporary and reasonable while trapping Daniel.

Study Questions

1. How does the conspirators' manipulation through flattery and false claims warn us about deceptive tactics that exploit pride and vanity?
2. What does the irrevocable law teach about how legal structures can become rigid systems trapping even those with good intentions?
