

Deuteronomy 10:14

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Behold, the heaven and the heaven of heavens is the LORD'S thy God, the earth also, with all that therein is.

Analysis

Behold, the heaven and the heaven of heavens is the LORD'S—The Hebrew shamayim (heaven) is repeated with the superlative construct shemei hashamayim (heaven of heavens), denoting the highest heaven, God's throne room (cf. 1 Kings 8:27). This emphasizes Yahweh's universal sovereignty over all creation. The earth also, with all that therein is establishes God's comprehensive ownership by right of creation (Psalm 24:1).

The theological movement from verse 14 to 15 is stunning: the God who owns all creation nevertheless chose Israel. This juxtaposition of divine transcendence and covenant intimacy grounds the call to circumcise the heart (v. 16). Paul echoes this in Ephesians 1:4—before the foundation of the world, the sovereign Creator chose us in Christ. The doctrine of election emerges from God's freedom as universal Owner.

Historical Context

Moses delivered this second giving of the law on the plains of Moab (1406 BC) as Israel prepared to enter Canaan. This declaration of God's cosmic sovereignty preceded ethical commands, grounding obedience in God's character and Israel's election.
