

Deuteronomy 11:2

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And know ye this day: for I speak not with your children which have not known, and which have not seen the chastisement of the LORD your God, his greatness, his mighty hand, and his stretched out arm,

Analysis

And know ye this day: for I speak not with your children which have not known, neither have seen the chastisement of the LORD your God, his greatness, his mighty hand, and his stretched out arm,

Moses addresses the generation that witnessed firsthand God's mighty acts in Egypt and the wilderness. The Hebrew verb yada (עָדָה, 'know') implies experiential knowledge, not mere intellectual assent. This generation 'knows' because they have 'seen' (רָאָה, ra'ah)—they are eyewitnesses to divine intervention.

The phrase 'chastisement' (מִזְרָח, musar) encompasses discipline, correction, and instruction. God's redemptive judgment on Egypt and discipline of Israel served pedagogical purposes—revealing His character and teaching His people. The threefold description—'greatness, mighty hand, stretched out arm'—emphasizes God's sovereign power and purposeful intervention in history.

This verse establishes the principle of generational witness: those who experience God's works bear responsibility to testify to subsequent generations. The contrast with 'your children which have not known' underscores the unique accountability of eyewitnesses.

Historical Context

This address comes as Israel stands on the plains of Moab, ready to enter Canaan forty years after the Exodus. The original generation that left Egypt had died in the wilderness (except Joshua and Caleb). Moses speaks to those who were young during the Exodus or born in the wilderness—they witnessed Egypt's plagues, the Red Sea crossing, Sinai, the golden calf, Korah's rebellion, and decades of God's provision. Their children, however, would know these events only through testimony.

Study Questions

1. How does personal experience of God's faithfulness create unique responsibility to testify to others?
2. What 'mighty acts' has God done in your life that you must not allow the next generation to forget?
3. How does God use both blessing and discipline as 'chastisement' to teach His people?
