

Deuteronomy 11:27

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

A blessing, if ye obey the commandments of the LORD your God, which I command you this day:

Analysis

The blessing is conditioned: 'if ye obey the commandments of the LORD your God, which I command you this day.' The blessing isn't automatic or unconditional but flows from responsive obedience. The Hebrew construction im tishme'u (אם תשמעו, 'if you obey') makes this explicit. The phrase 'which I command you this day' emphasizes immediacy—they face real-time decision requiring present response. Moses functions as covenant mediator delivering Yahweh's stipulations. Obedience means hearkening to God's revealed will through His appointed messenger. Rejecting Moses's words means rejecting God's covenant.

Historical Context

Moses's role as mediator prefigures Christ (Hebrews 3:1-6), though Christ's superiority as Son surpasses Moses's role as servant. The Israelites' contemporaneous decision parallels every generation's responsibility to respond to revealed truth. The apostolic teaching similarly binds Christians (2 Thessalonians 3:14)—rejecting apostolic doctrine means forfeiting blessing. Covenant blessings always attend covenant obedience.

Study Questions

1. How does immediate obedience ('this day') differ from delayed or theoretical commitment?
2. What does it mean to recognize and submit to God's appointed messengers of His word?
3. How do we discern true messengers of God's word from false teachers?
