

Deuteronomy 22:15

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Then shall the father of the damsel, and her mother, take and bring forth the tokens of the damsel's virginity unto the elders of the city in the gate:

Analysis

---

The father of the damsel, and her mother, take and bring forth the tokens of the damsel's virginity (betulim, בְּתוּלִים)—the physical evidence preserved from the wedding night. Unto the elders of the city in the gate—Israel's judicial system operated through local elders (zeqenim, זִקְנִים) who adjudicated disputes at the city gate, the public forum for legal proceedings.

The parents' active role demonstrates family solidarity and the communal nature of marriage. They defend their daughter's honor by presenting evidence they had carefully preserved. The betulim likely refers to the bloodstained cloth from the consummation night, proving the bride's virginity. This public legal process—involving elders, evidence, witnesses, and testimony—ensures justice through transparent proceedings rather than private vengeance or arbitrary judgments.

Historical Context

The city gate functioned as ancient Israel's courthouse where elders heard cases, rendered judgments, and executed sentences (Ruth 4:1-12; Proverbs 31:23). These weren't professional judges but respected community leaders chosen for wisdom and integrity. The preservation of physical evidence reflects ancient legal practices requiring material proof beyond mere testimony. The parents' involvement underscores that marriage joined families, not just individuals, and that families shared responsibility for their children's conduct and vindication.

Study Questions

1. How does the requirement for physical evidence and public proceedings protect against false accusations and ensure justice?
2. What does the parents' role in defending their daughter teach about family loyalty and the responsibility to protect the vulnerable?
