

Deuteronomy 25:8

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Then the elders of his city shall call him, and speak unto him:
and if he stand to it, and say, I like not to take her;

Analysis

Then the elders of his city shall call him, and speak unto him—the community leaders investigated, ensuring the brother-in-law understood his obligation and the consequences of refusal. And if he stand to it, and say, I like not to take her—if after counseling he persisted in refusal, the law provided release mechanism. The Hebrew lo chafatsti (לֹא חָפַצְתִּי) means 'I have no delight/desire,' indicating this was voluntary choice, not coercion.

The elders' intervention served multiple purposes: ensuring the brother wasn't refusing from misunderstanding, giving the widow formal witness, and preparing the community for the public ceremony (verse 9) that would release both parties from obligation. The process balanced the widow's need for resolution with the brother's freedom of conscience, preventing both indefinite abandonment and forced marriage.

Historical Context

Given circa 1406 BC as part of the judicial procedures Israel would implement in Canaan. The elder system existed in tribal patriarchal society, with family heads serving as local authorities. This contrasted with Egypt's centralized bureaucracy and prepared Israel for the distributed governance structure appropriate to their scattered towns and villages. The elders' investigative role ensured hasty decisions didn't harm vulnerable parties.

Study Questions

1. Why does wise governance sometimes require process and deliberation rather than immediate resolution?
2. How does this law balance individual freedom with communal responsibility and protection of the vulnerable?
3. What role should church elders play in mediating disputes and counseling difficult family decisions today?
