

Deuteronomy 27:10

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Thou shalt therefore obey the voice of the LORD thy God, and do his commandments and his statutes, which I command thee this day.

Analysis

Thou shalt therefore obey the voice of the LORD thy God, and do his commandments and his statutes, which I command thee this day. The word therefore connects obedience to identity - because you are God's people, you must obey His voice. Identity determines behavior; what we are shapes how we act. Gospel indicative precedes gospel imperative.

Obedying the voice of the LORD personalizes the relationship - this is not merely following abstract rules but hearing and responding to God's personal address. The law expresses God's will for His covenant people.

The distinction between commandments (specific directives) and statutes (general principles) indicates comprehensive obedience encompasses both particular duties and overall lifestyle. Both explicit commands and broad ethical norms govern covenant life.

The phrase this day creates urgency - obedience begins immediately. There is no grace period or delayed implementation. God's commands require present-tense response.

Historical Context

This formula - because you are God's people, therefore obey - pervades Deuteronomy and shapes biblical ethics generally. Behavior flows from identity; what God has done for us obligates how we live for Him.

This ethical pattern continues in New Testament - because you are in Christ, therefore live as children of light (Ephesians 5:8).
