

Deuteronomy 27:3

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And thou shalt write upon them all the words of this law, when thou art passed over, that thou mayest go in unto the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee, a land that floweth with milk and honey; as the LORD God of thy fathers hath promised thee.

Analysis

And thou shalt write upon them all the words of this law, when thou art passed over, that thou mayest go in unto the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee, a land that floweth with milk and honey; as the LORD God of thy fathers hath promised thee. Writing all the words of this law creates public record of covenant requirements. This is not selective quotation but comprehensive inscription of the law, making God's standards fully accessible.

The timing when thou art passed over indicates immediate action. Upon entering Canaan, before settling or conquering, Israel must inscribe the law. This prioritizes covenant commitment above all other concerns.

The description land that floweth with milk and honey contrasts blessing with obligation. Israel receives rich inheritance, but possession depends on covenant faithfulness. Blessing and obedience are inseparably linked.

The phrase as the LORD God of thy fathers hath promised thee grounds present experience in past promises. God's faithfulness to the patriarchal covenant obligates Israel to faithful response.

Historical Context

Inscribing the entire law on plastered stones required substantial work - the Torah contains considerable text. This effort demonstrated serious commitment to making God's word publicly accessible.

The milk and honey description became traditional characterization of Canaan's fertility compared to wilderness regions where Israel wandered.
