

Deuteronomy 27:7

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And thou shalt offer peace offerings, and shalt eat there, and rejoice before the LORD thy God.

Analysis

And thou shalt offer peace offerings, and shalt eat there, and rejoice before the LORD thy God. Peace offerings (fellowship offerings) followed burnt offerings, demonstrating the pattern of worship - first atonement and consecration, then communion and celebration. Access to joyful fellowship requires prior sacrificial atonement.

The permission to eat there distinguishes peace offerings from burnt offerings. While burnt offerings were entirely consumed on the altar, peace offerings included communal meal where worshipers ate portions, symbolizing fellowship with God and each other.

The command rejoice before the LORD makes joy a religious duty, not mere emotional preference. Worship includes celebration of God's goodness, expressing gratitude for His provision and covenant relationship. Joy is appropriate response to divine blessing.

This pattern foreshadows gospel order - Christ's complete sacrifice (burnt offering) enables believers' fellowship with God and each other (peace offering), producing joy in His presence.

Historical Context

Peace offerings provided most of Israel's meat consumption, as daily diet consisted primarily of grains, vegetables, and dairy. These sacrificial meals became occasions for family and community celebration.

Eating in God's presence symbolized covenant fellowship - the shared meal represented mutual commitment between God and His people.
