

Deuteronomy 29:14

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Neither with you only do I make this covenant and this oath;

Analysis

Neither with you only do I make this covenant and this oath. The covenant extends beyond those physically present - neither with you only indicates additional parties to the covenant. This anticipates verse 15's inclusion of future generations not yet born.

This demonstrates that covenant relationship involves not just individual decision but corporate identity spanning generations. God's covenant with Israel included their descendants, creating ongoing obligation and blessing across time.

This principle operates in New Covenant church context - believers' children are included in covenant community (Acts 2:39), receiving covenant signs and blessings while growing into personal faith commitment.

The generational nature of covenant teaches that God works through families and communities, not merely isolated individuals. Faith is transmitted through covenant community's teaching and example.

Historical Context

Including future generations in covenant assembly created continuity of obligation. Each generation inherited both blessing and responsibility from parents' covenant commitment.

This parallels circumcision given to eight-day-old infants who could not consciously consent but were included in covenant community by birth.
