

Deuteronomy 29:9

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Keep therefore the words of this covenant, and do them, that ye may prosper in all that ye do.

Analysis

Keep therefore the words of this covenant, and do them, that ye may prosper in all that ye do. The exhortation keep...the words of this covenant demands careful attention to covenant obligations. Prosperity depends on covenant faithfulness - obedience and blessing are inseparably linked in the Mosaic economy.

The dual command keep...and do connects knowing and doing, hearing and obeying. Mere knowledge of God's requirements without obedient action is insufficient. James later teaches that faith without works is dead.

The purpose that ye may prosper in all that ye do promises comprehensive success to the obedient. This is not health-and-wealth gospel promising automatic prosperity, but covenant blessing promising that faithful obedience results in flourishing.

Reformed theology maintains that while believers are not under Mosaic covenant, the principle that righteousness leads to blessing remains true spiritually and often temporally.

Historical Context

Deuteronomy repeatedly connects obedience with blessing and disobedience with curse. This covenant operates on conditional blessing principle - do this and live.

Israel's history validated this - faithful kings (David, Hezekiah, Josiah) experienced prosperity; wicked kings brought disaster.
