

Deuteronomy 32:14

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Butter of kine, and milk of sheep, with fat of lambs, and rams of the breed of Bashan, and goats, with the fat of kidneys of wheat; and thou didst drink the pure blood of the grape.

Analysis

Butter of kine, and milk of sheep, with fat of lambs—Moses recounts God's extravagant provision using Hebrew ḥem'at bāqār (cream/curds of cattle) and ḥālāv šō'n (milk of flock). Rams of the breed of Bashan references the renowned pastureland east of Jordan known for prime livestock (Ezekiel 39:18, Amos 4:1). The metaphor of drinking the pure blood of the grape (דַּם-עֵנָב, dam-'ēnāb) is poetic imagery for finest wine, not literal blood.

This verse catalogs covenant blessings—agricultural abundance, livestock prosperity, and luxury goods—demonstrating that Israel's rebellion (v.15-18) was not born from deprivation but from prosperity. The imagery anticipates Jesus's eucharistic language of bread and wine representing covenant relationship.

Historical Context

The Song of Moses (Deuteronomy 32) was composed circa 1406 BC as prophetic testimony against Israel's future apostasy. Bashan, conquered under Moses (Numbers 21:33-35), became proverbial for agricultural excellence. This verse establishes the contrast: God's lavish faithfulness versus Israel's ingratitude.
