

Deuteronomy 32:18

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Of the Rock that begat thee thou art unmindful, and hast forgotten God that formed thee.

Analysis

Of the Rock that begat thee thou art unmindful—šûr yĕlādĕkâ (צור יִלְדֶּךָ) uses the verb yālad, typically for childbirth, creating powerful imagery: God as both father who begets and mother who gives birth. Unmindful (נָשִׁיחַ) means to neglect or forget, implying deliberate inattention, not mere forgetfulness.

Hast forgotten God that formed thee—mĕḥōlēlekâ (נִחַלְתָּ) from ḥûl means to writhe in labor, again using maternal imagery. The double metaphor (father begetting, mother birthing) emphasizes both God's creative power and nurturing care. This parallels Isaiah 49:15: 'Can a woman forget her sucking child?' Yet Israel did what seemed impossible—forgot their Creator.

Historical Context

The metaphor of God as father appears throughout Deuteronomy (1:31, 8:5, 32:6), but maternal imagery is rarer, making this verse striking. The covenant at Sinai established Israel's unique identity as God's 'son' (Exodus 4:22). Forgetting their origin parallels Adam's sin—creatures denying their Creator, autonomy replacing dependence.

Study Questions

1. How does the combination of paternal and maternal imagery for God deepen your understanding of His creative love?
2. In what ways do you 'forget' God who formed you by living autonomously rather than dependently?
