

Deuteronomy 32:28

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

For they are a nation void of counsel, neither is there any understanding in them.

Analysis

For they are a nation void of counsel, neither is there any understanding in them—Moses shifts focus to Israel's enemies, diagnosing their spiritual blindness. The Hebrew goy oved etsot hemah (גוי אֹבֵד עֲצוֹת הֵמָּה, 'a nation perishing of counsel they') uses oved, meaning lost, perishing, wandering—not merely lacking counsel but fundamentally disoriented, without moral or spiritual compass. Etsot (עֲצוֹת, 'counsel') refers to wise plans, sound judgment, strategic thinking rooted in truth.

The parallel phrase ve'ein bahem tevunah (וְאֵין בָּהֶם תְּבוּנָה, 'and there is not in them understanding') uses tevunah, discernment or insight—the ability to perceive spiritual reality and consequences. This echoes Israel's own indictment (Deuteronomy 32:6), but here applies to pagan nations. Their military victories over apostate Israel don't reflect superior wisdom but God's use of foolish instruments to judge His people. Rome didn't understand it was fulfilling divine purpose when destroying Jerusalem (AD 70); neither did Babylon comprehend its role in 586 BC.

This diagnosis explains why pagans misattribute their victories (v. 27)—they lack theological categories to understand covenant judgment. Natural man cannot discern spiritual realities (1 Corinthians 2:14). Only divine revelation grants understanding of God's purposes in history.

Historical Context

Moses' assessment proves accurate throughout history. Assyria conquered northern Israel (722 BC) but attributed victory to Asshur rather than recognizing Yahweh's judgment (Isaiah 10:13-14). Babylon destroyed Jerusalem (586 BC) but boasted of Marduk's power rather than understanding they executed divine discipline (Habakkuk 1:11). Rome razed the second temple (AD 70) without comprehending they fulfilled Jesus' prophecy (Matthew 24:2). Each conquering power lacked spiritual understanding, seeing only military might and political strategy. The pattern continues: secular historians analyze Israel's defeats through geopolitical lenses, unable to perceive covenant theology operating in history. Only Scripture provides the 'counsel' and 'understanding' to interpret events rightly.

Study Questions

1. How does pagan nations' lack of spiritual understanding prevent them from correctly interpreting their own military victories?
2. What does it mean that God uses 'foolish' nations (lacking counsel) to discipline His own 'wise' people?
