

Deuteronomy 4:15

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Take ye therefore good heed unto yourselves; for ye saw no manner of similitude on the day that the LORD spake unto you in Horeb out of the midst of the fire:

Analysis

The command 'take ye therefore good heed unto yourselves' (Hebrew 'shamar me'od') demands utmost vigilance against idolatry. The reason—'ye saw no manner of similitude'—reiterates that God revealed Himself through Word, not form. Any attempt to represent God visually constitutes rebellion against His self-revelation. This verse grounds the second commandment in redemptive history—since God chose to reveal Himself through spoken Word at Sinai, any image-based worship violates His revealed will. The Reformed tradition's opposition to religious images rests on this foundation.

Historical Context

Israel's monotheism stood radically opposed to ancient Near Eastern polytheism, which relied heavily on idol worship. Egypt had animal-headed deities; Canaan worshiped Baal through bull statues and Asherah poles; Mesopotamia filled temples with divine images. God's formless revelation at Sinai distinguished Israel's worship from surrounding paganism. Yet Israel repeatedly violated this command (golden calf, Exodus 32; Jeroboam's calves, 1 Kings 12:28; widespread idolatry leading to exile).

Study Questions

1. How does God's formless revelation at Sinai establish the foundation for the prohibition of religious images?
2. In what ways might modern Christians subtly violate the spirit of this command through visual-based worship or entertainment-driven services?
