

Deuteronomy 5:29

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

O that there were such an heart in them, that they would fear me, and keep all my commandments always, that it might be well with them, and with their children for ever!

Analysis

God's lament 'O that there were such an heart in them' reveals divine desire for genuine inward transformation, not mere external compliance. The Hebrew 'mi-yitten' (who will give/O that) expresses deep longing. God desires 'that they would fear me, and keep all my commandments always'—permanent, heartfelt obedience flowing from reverential love. The promise 'that it might be well with them, and with their children for ever' shows obedience brings multi-generational blessing. This verse anticipates the new covenant where God writes law on hearts (Jeremiah 31:33, Ezekiel 36:26-27). Only sovereign grace produces the transformed heart capable of covenant faithfulness.

Historical Context

Despite initial commitment at Sinai, Israel repeatedly violated covenant: golden calf (Exodus 32), rebellion at Kadesh (Numbers 14), Baal worship (Numbers 25), and cyclical apostasy throughout Judges, Kings, and Chronicles. The problem wasn't lack of revelation or external structure but heart corruption requiring regeneration. The prophets repeatedly called for circumcised hearts (Deuteronomy 10:16, Jeremiah 4:4), anticipating new covenant transformation. Only Christ's atonement and Spirit's indwelling produce genuine obedience.

Study Questions

1. How does God's desire for 'such an heart' reveal that external compliance without heart transformation doesn't constitute true obedience?
2. In what ways does this verse anticipate the new covenant promise where God Himself creates willing, obedient hearts in His elect (Ezekiel 36:26-27)?
