

Ecclesiastes 11:2

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Give a portion to seven, and also to eight; for thou knowest not what evil shall be upon the earth.

Analysis

Give a portion to seven, and also to eight—the Hebrew ten cheleq le-shiv'ah ve-gam li-shemonah (תְּנַחֲלֵךְ לְשָׁבֵעָה וְגַם לְשָׁמֹנָה) uses numerical parallelism (seven...eight) to indicate generosity that goes beyond typical expectations. This idiom appears in wisdom literature (Proverbs 6:16, 30:18) to mean "several" or "many." The counsel: diversify your investments and sharing—don't put all resources in one venture.

For thou knowest not what evil shall be upon the earth—ki lo teda mah-yihyeh ra'ah al-ha-aretz (כִּי לֹא תִּדְעַ מַה-יִהְיֶה בְּעֵת עַל-הָאָרֶץ) acknowledges life's uncertainty. Since the future is unknown and disaster may strike, wisdom counsels both diversification and generosity. Spread risk across multiple ventures; share generously with multiple recipients. When calamity comes (and it will), diversified investments and generous relationships provide resilience. Luke 16:9 echoes this: "Make friends by means of unrighteous wealth, so that when it fails they may receive you."

Historical Context

Ancient Near Eastern economies were vulnerable to localized disasters—drought, warfare, or plague could devastate specific regions while sparing others. Maritime trade spread risk across multiple shipments (thus "cast thy bread upon the waters," 11:1). Agricultural diversification protected against crop failure—planting multiple fields, storing grain in different locations. The wisdom of generosity to multiple people created social capital—those helped in good times might reciprocate during hardship. Jesus's parable of the talents teaches similar diversification through productive stewardship (Matthew 25:14-30). Modern portfolio theory validates this ancient wisdom: diversification reduces risk.
