

Ecclesiastes 11:5

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

As thou knowest not what is the way of the spirit, nor how the bones do grow in the womb of her that is with child: even so thou knowest not the works of God who maketh all.

Analysis

The Preacher acknowledges human limitations: 'As thou knowest not what is the way of the spirit, nor how the bones do grow in the womb of her that is with child: even so thou knowest not the works of God who maketh all.' The verse employs two mysteries—wind/spirit ('ruach,' רֹאשׁ, meaning both wind and spirit) and fetal development—to illustrate comprehensive ignorance of God's works. Ancient peoples didn't understand meteorology or embryology; these natural processes remained mysterious. The comparison teaches epistemic humility: if basic natural processes exceed human understanding, how much more do God's comprehensive purposes? This verse anticipates Jesus's teaching to Nicodemus: 'The wind bloweth where it listeth... so is every one that is born of the Spirit' (John 3:8). Spiritual realities transcend human comprehension, requiring faith beyond sight.

Historical Context

Ancient peoples observed wind patterns and pregnancy but lacked scientific understanding of either. The ruach (wind/spirit) was particularly mysterious—invisible yet powerful, unpredictable yet purposeful. Psalm 139:13-16 similarly marvels at fetal development as God's mysterious work. The verse teaches that if natural processes exceed understanding, divine purposes certainly do. This anticipated Job's experience: God answered Job's questions by asking about creation's mysteries (Job 38-41), teaching that finite humans cannot comprehend infinite wisdom. Jesus used similar logic: if earthly things are mysterious, how much more heavenly realities (John 3:12)? The Reformers emphasized that God's wisdom surpasses human reason, requiring humble faith. Modern science has explained meteorology and embryology, yet deeper mysteries remain—consciousness, quantum mechanics, divine providence.

Study Questions

1. What mysteries in God's providence perplex you, and how does this verse counsel humility and trust despite incomplete understanding?
2. How does acknowledging limits to human knowledge prevent both arrogant rationalism and anti-intellectual obscurantism?
