

Esther 2:11

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And Mordecai walked every day before the court of the women's house, to know how Esther did, and what should become of her.

Analysis

And Mordecai walked every day before the court of the women's house, to know how Esther did, and what should become of her. Mordecai's daily vigil outside the women's quarters demonstrates faithful concern and covenant loyalty. The phrase "walked every day" (mit'haleikh bechol-yom, מִתְּהַלֵּךְ בְּכָל-יוֹם) suggests habitual, persistent action—not casual interest but committed care. He sought "to know how Esther did" (her wellbeing) and "what should become of her" (her ultimate fate). This daily routine served multiple purposes: maintaining their relationship despite separation, gathering information about palace affairs, and perhaps positioning himself to receive news and communicate when possible. Mordecai's faithfulness to Esther foreshadows his later faithfulness to the Jewish community and models the perseverance required in serving God's long-term purposes through daily, seemingly mundane obedience.

Historical Context

Ancient palace complexes separated women's quarters from general access, but external courts or gates allowed limited proximity. Mordecai's position at the king's gate (v. 19, 21) gave him official reason to be in the palace complex daily. The women's house likely had outer courts where male officials conducted business, allowing Mordecai legitimate access without violating harem privacy. His daily presence there wouldn't have appeared unusual for a palace official. The statement that he did this "every day" emphasizes both his dedication and the extended timeline—this pattern continued throughout Esther's year-long preparation and presumably beyond. Such sustained, daily faithfulness in small things prepared him for decisive action in the crisis to come.

Study Questions

1. What does Mordecai's daily faithfulness in small things teach about how God prepares His servants for crucial moments through sustained, ordinary obedience?
2. How does his watchful care for Esther model covenant loyalty and familial responsibility even when circumstances create separation?
