

Exodus 14:26

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And the LORD said unto Moses, Stretch out thine hand over the sea, that the waters may come again upon the Egyptians, upon their chariots, and upon their horsemen.

Analysis

God's command to Moses—'Stretch out thine hand over the sea, that the waters may come again upon the Egyptians'—reverses the miracle. What provided salvation to Israel becomes judgment on Egypt. The same waters that walled protection now bring destruction. The comprehensive targets—'chariots, and...horsemen'—ensure total defeat. God's judgments are thorough, His deliverances complete.

Historical Context

Moses' obedient stretch of his hand triggered the waters' return. The timing came after Israel crossed safely but while Egypt was in mid-sea—perfect for judgment, evidence of divine orchestration.

Study Questions

1. How does the same means (the sea) bringing salvation to some and judgment to others picture the gospel's dividing effect?
2. What does God's timing—water returning at the perfect moment—teach about His precision in judgment?
