

Exodus 18:27

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And Moses let his father in law depart; and he went his way into his own land.

Analysis

And Moses let his father in law depart; and he went his way into his own land—Jethro's departure after giving counsel shows he came to help, not control. The verb 'let depart' (נָשַׁלַּח, vay'shalach, 'sent away') indicates Moses' releasing Jethro with honor. The phrase 'he went his way into his own land' shows Jethro returns to Midian—his mission complete. Numbers 10:29-32 records Moses later inviting Hobab (apparently Jethro's son or another name for Jethro) to stay as guide, suggesting warm relationship continued. Jethro's return despite witnessing impending Sinai revelation shows contentment with his role: give wisdom, then leave. This models healthy advisory relationships—counsel without controlling, help without hovering. Jethro doesn't demand permanent position or recognition; he serves and departs.

Historical Context

Jethro's departure before the Sinai covenant-making shows his role was preparatory, not participatory in Israel's covenant. His wisdom prepared Israel for what God would do, then he stepped aside.
