

Exodus 2:6

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And when she had opened it, she saw the child: and, behold, the babe wept. And she had compassion on him, and said, This is one of the Hebrews' children.

Analysis

And when she had opened it, she saw the child: and, behold, the babe wept. And she had compassion on him, and said, This is one of the Hebrews' children (וַתַּחֲמֹל אֶלָּא, vatachmol alav, "she had compassion")—The baby's crying provokes compassion (חַמָּל, chamal, "pity/mercy"). God uses natural human tenderness to save His chosen deliverer. This is one of the Hebrews' children—she knows the genocide decree; her recognition creates moral crisis. Will she obey her father's law or act on conscience? The text's simplicity heightens the drama: a moment's decision determines Moses' fate and Israel's future. Her compassion foreshadows God's greater compassion for Israel (2:24-25, 3:7-9).

Historical Context

Egyptian sources occasionally show royal clemency toward conquered peoples' children. That Pharaoh's daughter immediately recognizes a Hebrew child suggests physical or cultural markers (circumcision, swaddling, the ark's style). Her willingness to defy the decree indicates either strong character or confidence in her royal immunity.

Study Questions

1. How does the princess's compassion despite knowing the child's identity challenge you to act mercifully regardless of tribal or political divisions?
2. What does this moment teach about God's use of human emotion (even in pagans) to accomplish His redemptive purposes?
