

Exodus 21:12

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

He that smiteth a man, so that he die, shall be surely put to death.

Analysis

He that smiteth a man, so that he die, shall be surely put to death.

Lex talionis (law of retaliation) begins—'smiteth a man so he die' (מְקַה אִישׁ וָמֵת, makkeh ish vamet) means fatal striking. The doubled verb 'shall surely die' (נִנְיָת, mot yumat) emphasizes certainty. This implements the sixth commandment—murder requires capital punishment. Why death for death? Genesis 9:6: 'whoever sheds human blood, by man shall his blood be shed, for God made man in His image.' Murder assaults God's image; only death atones. The law protects life's sanctity by making murder capital. Distinction between murder (vv. 12-14) and manslaughter (vv. 13) shows justice requires intent consideration.

Historical Context

Ancient Near Eastern law codes (Hammurabi, Hittite) included capital punishment for murder but varied in application. Israel's law, grounded in imago Dei, universally applied capital punishment for intentional homicide.

Study Questions

1. Why does murder require death penalty—what does this teach about human life's value?
2. How does Genesis 9:6 (image of God) ground capital punishment for murder?
