

Exodus 35:26

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And all the women whose heart stirred them up in wisdom spun goats' hair.

Analysis

The repetition 'every man that offered' emphasizes individual, personal participation—not collective abstraction but specific choices by specific people. The offering of gold (זָהָב, zahav) as a 'wave offering' (תְּנוּפָה, tenupah) presents a paradox: wave offerings typically involved lighter items (sheaves, etc.), but here heavy gold is 'waved' before the LORD—perhaps indicating lifting it high as a gesture of dedication. This demonstrates that no gift is too valuable to be offered to God; He is worthy of our best.

Historical Context

Gold was the most precious metal in the ancient world, used for royal and religious purposes. Israel's abundance of gold came directly from Egyptian plunder, demonstrating how God enriched His people to enable them to build His dwelling richly.

Study Questions

1. What does the 'wave offering' of gold teach about presenting our most valuable possessions to God?
2. How does God's provision of wealth through the Exodus plunder demonstrate His intention to dwell richly among His people?
