

Exodus 37:7

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And he made two cherubims of gold, beaten out of one piece made he them, on the two ends of the mercy seat;

Analysis

Two cherubim (כְּרָבִים, keruvim) of beaten gold (מִקְשָׁה, mikshah—"hammered work from one piece") formed from the mercy seat itself—not attached separately but beaten from the same gold. This teaches that worship (cherubim represent worshiping beings) is inseparable from atonement (mercy seat). The cherubim looking down at the blood-sprinkled mercy seat illustrate angels longing to look into redemption (1 Peter 1:12). Beaten from one piece emphasizes unity of worship and atonement in God's redemptive plan.

Historical Context

These cherubim were the only representational art allowed in the tabernacle (cf. the prohibition on graven images, Exodus 20:4). Their presence above the mercy seat demonstrated that they guarded holiness while directing attention to atonement. Ancient Near Eastern temples often featured winged creatures flanking thrones.

Study Questions

1. What does the cherubim being beaten from the same piece as the mercy seat teach about the inseparability of worship and atonement?
2. How do angels longing to look into redemption (represented by cherubim facing the mercy seat) demonstrate the wonder of salvation?
