

Exodus 38:4

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And he made for the altar a brasen grate of network under the compass thereof beneath unto the midst of it.

Analysis

The grate of network bronze (רוּשֶׁת נְחֹשֶׁת, mikhbar ma'aseh reshet nechoshet) provided structure beneath the altar's compass (כָּרֶב, karkov—'ledge' or 'border'), likely allowing ash removal and airflow for continuous burning. This grating beneath teaches that judgment's fire requires careful engineering—God's wrath against sin isn't chaotic rage but ordered justice. The network design suggests that nothing falls through God's justice; His judgment captures every sin, yet provides means (grating) for dealing with judgment's remains (ashes).

Historical Context

The bronze grating sat approximately halfway up the altar (v. 4), forming a ledge where priests stood to service the offerings. The network design allowed ashes to fall through while supporting the burning sacrifice above. This engineering enabled continuous operation of the altar.

Study Questions

1. What does the carefully engineered grating teach about God's judgment being ordered justice rather than chaotic wrath?
2. How does the network capturing everything yet allowing ash removal illustrate both thoroughness and provision in divine judgment?
